(HIMACHAL PRADESH)

Information as per clause (b) of Sub-Section 1 of Section 4 and 4.2 of
Right to Information Act, 2005

4(1)(b)(i) :-

The particulars of Government of India Press, Shimla, functions and duties. :-

The old Government Central Branch Press, Shimla, was established in 1872, at the site of the present Ripon Hospital, but having been destroyed by fire it was subsequently shifted to "CLAREFIELD" in 1879. The Adjutant General's Press was amalgamated with the Shimla Press in 1885.

The old Government Monotype Press was established in February, 1904 at "BENMORE", Chhota Shimla during the Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon when the Presses were administered by the Finance and Commerce Departments. Only confidential and urgent jobs of the Government of India Press, Offices were printed in the Monotype Press. In 1905, the Monotype Press was transferred to a site below the old Government Central Branch Press, where the goods station of the Kalka-Shimla Railway now stands, and in 1908, was again transferred to the present site at Tuti Kandi, Shimla, which is about two miles away from the town.

The present Government of India Press, Shimla, is the result of the amalgamation in a more suitable building on March, 1924, of the Government Central Branch Press and the Monotype Press.

The outbreak of World War-II brought in its wake extremely heavy demands for printing work in the Government of India Presses. The capacity of the Shimla Press was limited owing to the peculiarity of its Organization. The Press was planned and built to produce printing work containing more number of pages but small number of copies. The mechanical composing strength was therefore, kept strong and the number of printing and binding machinery provided was small. Schemes for expansion of the Press and for the acquisition of any private building did not go through. Additional machinery was also not procurable owing to cessation of imports. Ways and means had, therefore, to be found to increase output. To remove the disparity of plant in the various branches, double shift system was introduced in the bindery and machine room which was highly successful. The Shimla Press was first in the field with the double shift system. It was never tried before in the history of Government of India Presses. With the approach of War to the India's Eastern Frontiers and the Calcutta Presses under the threat on that account, it became all the more necessary to increase the capacity of the Shimla Press to its utmost limits to meet the enormously increased demands for printing work. Most of the War Printing demands of secret nature. Usually profusely illustrated, were allotted to Shimla Press. Besides this, there was a huge amount of publicity material and propaganda literature. Double shift system was therefore introduced in other branches as and when found necessary. The Shimla section of the Press of the Private Secretary to the Viceroy was taken over in 1944 and finally amalgamated with the Shimla Press in 1947.

After the war, it was anticipated that the work would decrease; but with the partition of India in 1947 and attainment of Independence, the demands on the Press increased still further owing to the formation of new Ministries and the activities of Scientific, Statistical and Educational Departments and also to meet the needs of the then Part "B" and part "C" States which had not fully equipped Presses of their

As there was a serious congestion in several branches. "Marlin Lodge", a building adjoining the Press, with a floor space of 5560 square feet was acquired in 1952 to house the Press Office. The space thus released was utilized for industrial branches.
